Trump associate guilty of lying to Congress and witness tampering.

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Roger Stone, the right-wing provocateur and longtime associate of President Trump, was convicted on Thursday in his trial over allegations of lying to Congress and witness tampering.

The verdict is another victory for former Special Counsel Robert Mueller, whose legal team alleged that Stone had tried to conceal from Congress his contacts with the Trump campaign and people he believed were feeding him inside information about WikiLeaks during the 2016 campaign.
