

Capitol's COVID-19 spike could be bad Thanksgiving preview

Written by The Hill Press

Thursday, 19 November 2020 15:54 -

Lawmakers continue to struggle at times with masks and social distancing, with notoriously extroverted members having trouble resisting gathering in groups.

WASHINGTON, DC - Congress is experiencing a spike in COVID-19 cases among lawmakers while doing exactly what Americans are being warned not to do for Thanksgiving this year: gathering together after traveling from all over the country.

In the last week alone, seven members of Congress have tested positive for COVID-19 with three others quarantining after exposure.

Read the full story here