

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The House on Thursday passed legislation that would block drilling along the shoreline of Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR).

The 225-193 vote in favor of the bill, which follows the passage of two offshore drilling bans on Wednesday, sends a signal to Senate Republicans and the White House, who have said the climate change-focused legislation has no future in the upper chamber or as a law.

Read the full story here