Some education and experience beyond high school is essential to qualify for today's good paying jobs. A college degree is no longer the exception, but the norm. And be prepared to reinvent yourself several times in your career.

Brookfield, WI – Americans have access to higher education from community colleges to major universities, but are higher education outcomes failing young adults? Democrat Tom Palzewicz, running for Wisconsin's Fifth Congressional District seat, is a staunch believer in education that prepares people for making a living wage.

In decades past, a high school diploma could lead to a good-paying, secure job. However, it is a different world, and the demands for candidates with a college degree is no longer the exception, but the norm. Students leaving high school face higher unemployment rates. There appears to be a disconnect between the classroom and the workplace. Palzewicz believes education needs to connect the dots.
