

UWEC and Local Business "A flourishing relationship worthy of investment"

Written by Kathleen Vinehout, State Senator 31st District

Tuesday, 12 July 2016 07:41 - Last Updated Wednesday, 13 July 2016 16:09

<http://newiproggressive.com/images/stories/S5/uwec-campus-s5.jpg>

The UWEC Chancellor recently spoke to the Eau Claire Chamber of Commerce about the synergistic relationship between the university and business, one that makes it a critical partner in the success of the region and very much worthy of state investment.

EAU CLAIRE, WI - "One hundred years ago the Chamber rented a rail car to go down to Madison," President Bob McCoy of the Eau Claire Chamber of Commerce told the gathering of business leaders. A century ago, Chamber members traveled to Madison to advocate for a new UW campus in Eau Claire.

"Maybe next time we'll have to take a high speed train," he joked.

Recently, I attended a Chamber event at which University of Wisconsin Eau Claire Chancellor Jim Schmidt spoke to members about the university and its relationship with the community. The entire Chippewa Valley benefits from "the amazing culture of service in our Eau Claire businesses," said Chancellor Schmidt. "This is our culture at UWEC."

"The Eau Claire difference is the engagement of our students and faculty," Chancellor Schmidt noted. Nearly half of undergraduate students engage in research. This research can have a direct impact and positive benefit on our community.

Through many conversations and visits with faculty and students, I learned about the amazing research happening at UWEC and the direct benefits to Chippewa Valley businesses. I learned about the invention of new materials for manufacturing, advances in physical therapy, research in nursing, and students studying air and water quality near sand mines – just to name a few projects.

From molecules to the makeup of the earth, students learn by doing. Faculty work closely with students to help frame research questions, making relevance to real world challenges an important aspect of inquiry.

UWEC and Local Business "A flourishing relationship worthy of investment"

Written by Kathleen Vinehout, State Senator 31st District

Tuesday, 12 July 2016 07:41 - Last Updated Wednesday, 13 July 2016 16:09

All the interactions between business leaders, students and faculty take time. Developing relationships to create real world student experiences is difficult to quantify. In this age of accountability, university professors have come under fire. The heated political rhetoric does not improve morale and – in the end – hurts all of us.

The Chancellor has been touring businesses in the Chippewa Valley. He met with more than 70 business leaders and wove what he learned into his presentation to Chamber members. "I stand proudly to support liberal arts," he told business leaders. "The majority of the CEOs I asked came from the liberal arts and humanities."

In response to the budget cuts, the Chancellor led efforts with the entire campus staff to undergo eight major initiatives to reorganize how the campus does business.

Under Governor Walker's direction, majority legislators cut $250 million from the base University of Wisconsin System budget. In addition, they did not fund another $100 million in building maintenance, which normally passes as part of the state's borrowing budget. This is penny wise and pound-foolish. Investment in proper maintenance saves over the long-term. Consider what is happening with our roads. University buildings, like roads, need to be maintained.

Budget cuts and low faculty salaries (compared to peer institutions) mean faculty retention and recruitment is difficult. For example, this year the university lost 69 full-time equivalent instructional positions due to budget cuts with an additional 25 faculty resignations – an increase of 150% over last year (also a high year for faculty loss).

Business leaders expressed concern about the loss of faculty in accounting and economics. Graduates of these two program are highly sought by business leaders.

"What keeps you from expanding your business? We don't have confidence we can find employees," said the Chancellor in response to a question about a recent report on jobs. "We want to educate more people but we can't do this if we don't have the money."

UWEC and Local Business "A flourishing relationship worthy of investment"

Written by Kathleen Vinehout, State Senator 31st District

Tuesday, 12 July 2016 07:41 - Last Updated Wednesday, 13 July 2016 16:09

He told business leaders the conversations would continue. "I won't be asking you to help Jim," Chancellor Schmidt said. "I'll be asking what to do to help you and your business...to improve the vitality of our region."

President McCoy closed the address by telling those gathered, "Our fear is the future, what are we creating for the next generation?"

Whatever the future holds, we know the next generation of business leaders will need to be smarter and work synergistically with our university students and faculty.

The return on investments we make today will be the success of our next generation.