

Governor's Call for Special Session on Welfare

Written by Dave Hansen, State Senator Dist 30

Friday, 19 January 2018 12:50 - Last Updated Saturday, 20 January 2018 13:26

Walker's call for special session on welfare reform last Thursday was attempt to divert people's attention from latest Republican failures says Green Bay Senator.

GREEN BAY - Adam Jarchow lost in Tuesday's senate election in part because he and his Republican friends chose to attack struggling families.

Despite voters' rejection of these types of attacks, Governor Walker sees them as his opportunity to excite his supporters and shift their attention away from the fact that he, President Trump and Republicans in Madison and Congress have failed to help improve their lives.

Instead of giving a Taiwanese billionaire over $4 billion that will do little to help the vast majority of people in this state, a more informed governor might have decided instead to invest that money into our own families, businesses, schools and roads all across the state.

Now, seeing that his reelection ploy is not working, he is trying to divert the people's attention by calling a special session to wage new attacks on working families and the poor.

Governor Walker's call for a special session is another sign that he and legislative Republicans

Governor's Call for Special Session on Welfare

Written by Dave Hansen, State Senator Dist 30

Friday, 19 January 2018 12:50 - Last Updated Saturday, 20 January 2018 13:26

are running scared. It is a transparently political move that is just another reason so many people are voting for real change in Wisconsin and around the country.