

Biden electability argument takes hit

Written by The Hill Press

Tuesday, 27 August 2019 09:40 -

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Joe Biden's electability argument is increasingly showing signs of weakness.

A Monmouth University national poll released Monday found Biden falling by 13 points and in a three-way tie nationally with Sens. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) and Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.).

Democrats say it's the latest piece of evidence that the former vice president can't expect to win, simply by running on the idea that he is the candidate best positioned to defeat President Trump in a general election.

Read the full story here