Hearing, entitled "Lessons from the Mueller Report: Presidential Obstruction and Other Crimes," will start on June 10.

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee on Monday announced a series of hearings on special counsel Robert Mueller's Russia investigation in order to examine further President Trump's conduct as well as election interference by Moscow.

House Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) announced the next hearing, entitled "Lessons from the Mueller Report: Presidential Obstruction and Other Crimes," on June 10 as a way to push forward with the committee's sprawling oversight investigation into the Trump administration amid stonewalling from the White House.
