The People's Maps Commission is soliciting input in map-drawing process from Wisconsin residents.

Madison, Wis. — The Wisconsin People's Maps Commission (PMC) announced today a new public input portal at portal.wisconsin-mapping.org . Wisconsinites are encouraged to submit maps of their communities, redistricting plans of their own, and written comments to guide the work and recommendations of the PMC.

"We've said all along that these maps should be drawn with input from Wisconsinites across the state," said PMC Chair Chris Ford. "After months of testimony from folks in nearly every corner of the state, we need the same kind of turnout for the map-drawing process. Having direct feedback from communities will help us draw fair, impartial maps."

Submissions to the portal will be used to draw maps that fit the PMC's map-drawing criteria, found here . All submissions will also be published on the portal, providing transparency in the map-drawing process. Public input is crucial to create fair maps for Wisconsin.
