Beginning last week, Biden started doing more domestic trips, which offer him more opportunities to fundraise outside of the nation's capital.

WASHINGTON, DC - President Biden and Vice President Harris are ramping up their in-person fundraising at a critical point less than seven months out from the midterm elections.

The activity comes as Democrats fear losing the House and Senate majorities, and as donors clamor for more in-person events more than two years into the pandemic.

Harris has appeared at two fundraisers in the past week and Biden is scheduled to headline two separate DNC events in Portland and Seattle on Thursday as part of his second trip out west as president.
