Michels repeatedly claims Evers has flung the prison doors open, dumping nearly 1,000 violent criminals on the streets. He knowingly fails to understand how the parole system works in his attempt to scare Wisconsin voters.

MADISON, Wis. — “Wildly wrong,” “false and ridiculous,” “errs dramatically,” and “mangled a basic concept” — all terms used by Politifact to describe Tim Michels’ false claims about Governor Evers’ record on parole. Politifact gave Michels a “Pants on Fire” for saying Scott Walker had let out “zero” convicted felons while overstating the number of parolees during Gov. Evers’ first term.

Michels is spreading these “false and ridiculous” claims in an attempt to scare Wisconsin voters and further divide our state, while offering no concrete plans to improve public safety.

Meanwhile, Governor Evers has invested more than $100 million in public safety and law enforcement, and has fought for years to increase funding for localities to support local law enforcement, fire departments, and more.
