“While other politicians rely on volume and insults to pit Americans against one another, Evers’ understated yet knowledgeable leadership has been a welcome relief for Wisconsin.” - WSJ 10/10/22

MADISON, Wis. — In case you missed it, the Wisconsin State Journal’s Editorial Board announced their endorsement for Governor Tony Evers this weekend.

In their announcement, the State Journal’s ed board praised Gov. Evers’ leadership over the past four years — most notably highlighting his role as a check on Republican power in the State Legislature.

The board also noted Gov. Evers’ ability to deliver on some of his biggest promises, such as investing in public education, cutting costs for Wisconsinites, expanding broadband access across the state, and fixing our roads.

While other politicians rely on volume and insults to pit Americans against one another, Evers' understated yet knowledgeable leadership has been a welcome relief for Wisconsin.

Evers, a Democrat, has been the only real check on Republican power at the statehouse. That's because Republican lawmakers have repeatedly gerrymandered voting districts to give themselves an unfair lock on legislative power. They're unlikely to lose their majorities over the coming decade even if Democrats win a wave election.

Evers has come through on some of his biggest promises, including investing in public schools, fixing our roads and expanding rural broadband. He signed more than $2 billion in income tax cuts while avoiding the chronic budget deficits of the past. Wisconsin now enjoys a financially healthy surplus that's projected to top $5 billion by next summer.

With so many attack ads this fall claiming candidates of all stripes are "too extreme" for Wisconsin, such a charge against Evers would be laughable. He's modest, moderate, civil, sensible and relatively consistent. You know what you're going to get if you reelect Evers — something that can't be said of his opponent.

The Wisconsin State Journal editorial board endorses Evers for another four-year term in the Nov. 8 election.

The race for governor features sharp contrasts.

Evers is a Plymouth native and lifelong state resident with lots of experience leading government institutions. He can speak at length, and with depth and insight, into Wisconsin's challenges and opportunities.
